

- Create Extraordinary Results and Employee Engagement-

Generating results in today's complex business environment demands that we harness the best thinking and focused action of each employee.

Coaching is a better way to lead if you want to:

- Deliver high performance business results
- Build deep employee engagement and a culture of accountability and ownership
- Retain and develop top talent
- Unleash innovation, teamwork and collaboration

With changing customer demands, increased competition and new generation of workers, you must create an environment where associates feel empowered to take action, take risks, and cooperate and collaborate with others to accomplish mission critical objectives.

This demands leaders transform from being a "Manager" to being a "Coach".

A Coaching Culture:

- Creates engagement by focusing on individual's strengths and developing their potential.
- Creates accountability by transferring the ownership and responsibility for problem solving and finding solutions from the leaders to the employees.
- Drives results through collaboration and teamwork.

Research Shows Three Times Greater Business Impact is Generated by Leaders Who Coach and Develop Employees

Bersin & Associates, a premier research and consulting firm, found that senior leaders who coach and hold others accountable for coaching are three times more effective at producing improved business and talent results than those who do not.

Specifically, the study found that:

- Senior leaders frequently fail to model effective coaching. Only 11 percent of senior leaders regularly coach their employees.
- Managers lack the necessary skills to coach their employees, and this presents the most severe challenge to effective management of employee performance. The research shows that organizations effective at teaching managers to coach deliver higher levels of employee productivity, employee engagement and financial performance.
- At most organizations, there is a "disconnect" between the intended purpose of performance management and the reality. Companies want goal alignment, but more often focus entirely on performance appraisal. This is why the coaching element has such impact.

What graduates say about

"The single most impactful leadership skill I have ever learned."

"I wish I had learned this 30 years ago."

"Coaching is our future."
